

Which room are you in?

A short worksheet for finding your place in the community, and knowing what each group is actually for.

There are two groups. They are not the same room, and you do not have to pick only one. Read both missions, then use the questions on the next page before you introduce yourself. People who write something down first tend to post something real.

GROUP ONE

Permission to Change

The mission: to give high achievers permission to question the rules they inherited, and to build a life they actually chose.

THIS ROOM IS FOR YOU IF

- You built something that looks right and feels wrong.
- You are carrying rules you never agreed to.
- You want a place where ambition and honesty can sit together.

GROUP TWO

Physician Moms at a Crossroads

The mission: to give physician moms an honest room for the decision no one says out loud. Stay, cut back, or leave.

THIS ROOM IS FOR YOU IF

- You are a physician and a mother, and the math stopped working.
- You are weighing fewer clinical hours, a different role, or an exit.
- You want conversation without judgment and without performance.

Once you are in, post your answer to question five on the next page. That is the whole onboarding. No credentials, no highlight reel, no pitch.

Five questions worth answering first

Write short. Nobody is grading this. The point is to arrive with something true.

01

What brought you here? Name the moment you decided something had to change.

02

Fact versus story. A fact is what a camera would record. A story is what you decided it means.

THE FACT

THE STORY I ATTACHED TO IT

03

Which rule are you following that you never actually agreed to?

04

If nothing changes in two years, what does that cost you? Be specific. Name the thing, not the feeling.

05

Your first post. Introduce yourself in two sentences, and say what you want from this room.

One last thing. You do not have to be finished deciding to belong here. Most people arrive mid-question. Bring the question.
