

The Pivot Decision Framework

02

LAUREN FINE, MD · LAURENFINE.COM

"When you're facing a major change, the noise makes it impossible to think clearly."

This framework structures a major decision across four dimensions: values alignment, practical feasibility, identity fit, and regret minimization. It won't make the decision for you — but it will help you hear yourself clearly above the noise.

WRITE YOUR DECISION AT THE TOP

Be as specific as possible. Not 'should I change careers' but 'should I leave my current role to pursue X.'

THE DECISION I AM CONSIDERING:

THE FOUR DIMENSIONS

01

Values
Alignment

Does this match what actually

02

Practical
Feasibility

Is this actually possible

03

Identity
Fit

Does this feel like

04

Regret
Minimization

How will you feel
in 10 years?

HOW TO USE THIS FRAMEWORK

1. Name the decision clearly at the top.
2. Work through each of the four dimensions on the next pages.
3. Score each dimension 1–10 at the end of that section.
4. Use the final page to synthesize your scores and write your next step.

Working Through the Four Dimensions

DIMENSION 01 · VALUES ALIGNMENT

The decision that feels right on paper but wrong in your gut is usually a values mismatch.

List your top 5 values (not what you think they should be — what they actually are):

Does this decision honor those values? Where does it conflict?

What are you afraid of losing if you make this change? Is that fear values-based?

VALUES ALIGNMENT SCORE (1–10):

/10

DIMENSION 02 · PRACTICAL FEASIBILITY

Fear dressed as practicality is still fear. But real practical constraints are real. Know the difference.

What would need to be true for this to work practically? (finances, timing, support)

What's your actual runway — how long could you sustain this transition?

What's one practical obstacle and one realistic solution to it?

PRACTICAL FEASIBILITY SCORE (1–10):

/10

DIMENSION 03 · IDENTITY FIT

Not who you've been — who you're becoming. Does this path fit the person you're moving toward?

Describe the version of yourself who makes this change. Who are they?

What parts of your identity feel threatened? Which parts feel freed?

IDENTITY FIT SCORE (1–10):

/10

DIMENSION 04 · REGRET MINIMIZATION

Imagine yourself at 80, looking back. Which choice would you regret more — making it or not making it?

In 10 days, how will you feel if you do it? If you don't?

In 10 months?

In 10 years?

REGRET MINIMIZATION SCORE (1–10):	/10
-----------------------------------	-----

Synthesis · Your Decision

ENTER YOUR SCORES FROM EACH DIMENSION

Values Alignment	Practical Feasibility	Identity Fit	Regret Minimization
---------------------	--------------------------	-----------------	------------------------

What do your scores tell you?

Don't explain them — what do they make you feel?

What dimension surprised you most? What does that reveal?

If fear weren't a factor, what would you do?

Write the honest answer.

The decision I'm leaning toward — and why:

My next concrete step — before the end of this week:

NEED HELP THINKING THIS THROUGH?

Book a free discovery call at laurenfine.com — no obligation, just a conversation.

laurenfine.com · hello@laurenfine.com